SOME INCIDENTS

Of a Tour Around East Maul by Eight Knights, Four Fair and Four Bold. When the knights set out to weave the Mystic Circle (an arduous undertaking only to be compared to Jason's search for the Golden Fleece or Stanley's march through Central Africa,) they were as light of heart as birds on the wing. They sang, ' Hence, loathed Melancholy

Of Cerberus and blackest midnight born, But come thou goddess fair and free, In Heaven yelept Euphrosyne,

And by men, heart-easing mirth; Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee Jest and youthful jollity, Quips and cranks, and wanton wiles, Nods and becks, and wreathed smiles, Such as hang on Hebe's cheek. And love to live in dimple sleek; Sport that wrinkled care derides,

And laughter, holding both his sides. Come, and trip it as you go, On the light, fantastic toe; And in thy right hand lead with thee The mountain-nymph, sweet liberty." The mountain nymph and her whole crew accepted our invitation, went with us quite round the circle and made our tent their own. The knights spent their first afternoon among their friends at Huelo in high festivities which extended far into the night. With the rising sun they bid a cheerful adieu to their kindness and sallied forth into the great unknown, determined, come what might, to wave the mystic circle from which their knighthood hung as a golden prize. As the Grecian heroes went forth to Troy, so they "ever with a frolic welcome took the thunder and the sunshine, and opposed free hearts, free foreheads.'

Often have I seen fair knights sitting easily and carelessly in their saddles, riding up the most frightful precipices, and steeply descending from dizzy heights into yawning abysses', all the while singing as blythe and free as morning larks, or as quietly as if reclining half asleep in gently swinging hammocks

As they journeyed along They were singing a song In search of the mystic circle.

As the labors of Hercules are careknights of the mystic circle should be written. I saw that as they pursued their journey, they drew nigh to a very miry slough that was in the midst of their road, and it was impossible to escape it either on the right hand or on the left. Go through it they must to weave the charmed circle.

First the mules plunged in, and in their desperate struggles to extricate themselves, were thrown down: and here they wallowed for a time, being grievously bedaubed with mud from the tips of their stately ears to the ends of their slender tails. Being relieved of their burdens as they lay prone and sighing in the slough, they finally clambered out on the farther side and switched their muddy tails in saucy defiance as though ready to plunge into any other stygian pool. The knights, having heard from some Sancho Panza that prudence is the better part of valor, dismounted, and while peacocks, green lawns, stately trees their good steeds plunged wildly from bog to bog spattering their masters with mud which they carried all round the Mystic Circle, they jumped airily from island to island, and escaped without serious disaster. So they crossed the "deep Serbonian

Then they sat them down to rest and dine beneath the forest, beside a wide and limpid stream named by the ancients Simois: and betimes the young men rose up to play. One jumped the Simois with a flying leap. Another climbed over it on the branch of a wide-spreading Koa. They plucked a noble bunch of wild bananas and tossed it to the company: but in returning, it grieves me to relate that first one and then the other of these agile knights, jumped plump into the reedy Simois, and in bravely rescuing the second, the third and youngest knight, amid laughter and shrieks, was drawn with a splash into the swiftly flowing current, carrying with him the rod, gauntlet and helmet of the rosy knight yclept "D. V." which doth signify, not "God willing"—but Dolly Varden, the golden-haired and blameless knight, who wore her beaver up and her helmet sitting loosely on her head, which gave her when seen from behind a distinguished and peculiarly free and rolicking air.

I saw young Herbert with his beaver on, His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly armed. Rise from the Simois like feathered Mer-

It was a wonder that the twins, D. and D. V., who were sitting precariously perched on a tree over the | bled up and down the most frightful water, were not also dragged into the dangerous stream.

By herculean efforts of a sinewy knight the belmet and rod were recovered from the swift Simois, but the gauntlet was seen nevermore.

This same sinewy knight, a little later, performed the unparalleled asleep! When Di Vernon was duly feat of ascending, unaided by any rested, she simply rose in her saddle artificial helps, a cocoanut palm nine and rode on, unconscious that she hundred and fifty-seven and a half had performed any feat at all. artificial helps, a cocoanut palm nine feet high, and threw down a large number of cocoanuts for the delectation of the company. This feat we with milk and honey, boldly affirm has never been equalled and never will be.

As the low-descending sun of the third day glimmered in gold on the western sea, the knights of the ever western sea, the kinglis of the ever curving, never ending line, came to Wailuaiki, a double valley of delight, or a valley of double delights: a land of mountains, ferns, forests, lakes, streams, water-falls, and a pebbly

"In the afternoon they came into a land In which it seemed always afternoon. All round the coast the languid air did

Breathing like one that hath a weary dream. Like a downward smoke, the slender stream Along the cliff to fall and pause and fall did seem. A land of streams! Some, like a downward smoke, Slow-dropping veils of thinnest lawn, did go;

And some, through wavering lights and shadows broke, Rolling a slumberous sheet of foam They saw the gleaming river seaward

From the inner land." The knights were so enchanted, they felt like ceasing to weave the mystic circle, taking up their abode there, and joining in the choric song of Ullysses band when they came into the "Hollow Lotus-land." "There is sweet music here that softer

Than petals from blown roses on the Or night-dews on still waters between walls Of shadowy granite, in a gleaming

Music that gentler on the spirit lies Than tired eyelids upon tired eyes; Music that brings sweet sleep down from the blissfui skies." They spent two joyous days and nights in the enchanted valley, which quite surpassed "The Happy Valley of Rasselas."

They rambled, they boated, they bathed in the sea, and they bathed in the lake.

The second evening the musical knights began to sing a sweet and inspiring melody of profound significance to the intelligent, entitled "Ninety-nine bottles hung upon the wall." As the deep volume of song rolled majestically on, all were carried away in raptures of ever-increasing delight, except a fantastic knight who first grew silent, then sullen and finally began to fight with every one in the vain attempt to arrest the music which flowed serenely on like Tennyson's river, "forever and forever."

At Hana the knights were joined homes. by a joyous troop of water-nymphs, Their brave deeds are done, fully recorded, it is also befitting in the deep caverns of Waisnapa- Long may it be in the deep caverns of Junged Fre we shall se who led them to the silvery waters Their great vict'ry won. napa. Some of the mermaids plunged | Ere we shall see, into the shining waves, and diving | Or poet shall sing, under the rocks came up in distant | "Their swords are rust, caverns, where they were hidden Their bones are dust, from sight. They were closely followed by a merman.

"Who would be A merman bold Under the sea?"

Who would'nt be? But time would fail me to tell of Hana with its hospitable inhabitants, its green hills, and soft white shores, where the "tender curving lines of creamy spray" break upon the sand: of the kindly priest, his paintings, mosses and curios; of the merry rain and the rapid disappearance of a golden bunch of bananas; of Kipahulu and its waving cane, looking over to the fields of Kohala; of Waiu, its wind-swept shore, its starry night and flapping tent; of Kahikinui and its barren waste of aa; of Ulupalakua, its lowing herds, brilliant and solemn tomb; of Kula with its roaring bon-fire, juicy beafsteak, sweet corn, and its stories of the olden time. At Hana a knight of great experience, tact, boldness and prudence, gave us his easy and sensible solution of one of the most difficult questions of our lives.

When asked by the inquisitive company how he "proposed," answered instantly, "I told her that I loved her, and I asked her to be mine.' This straightforward method with the capricious sex is recorded for the benefit of all coming generations of knights. We must not forget the wild and beautiful rainbow falls of Alalele where the knights of the incomprehensible belt lay prone upon their faces, while they were firmly held and looked with a shuddering joy over the dizzy height. It made such an impression on one, he afterward dreamed that that rainbow was a solid prism of ice; that one of the fair knights whom he had offended pushed him headlong sheer over the beetling edge of the windy precipice. He slid down the ice prism till within sixty feet of the bottom, when he shot like an arrow into the boiling waters, and going down some fathoms it was four minutes before he could rise to the surface. Yet, strange to say, he rather enjoyed the excitement of this novel tobog-

On the rough a-a a daring feat of horsemanship was performed. One of the fair knights feeling tired lay down flat upon her back on her horse and quietly rested, gazing at the heavens while her animal scramprecipices. Another knight who saw her, but who was too far behind to help her if she had fallen, nearly fainted and fell from his horse, the cold shudders running down his back as he saw her horse jumping up a steep place and she apparently asleep! When Di Vernon was duly

On the ninth day they came to Ulupalakua, an oasis, a land flowing A garden of delights To feast the weary knights.

Here they sang with Sir Walter's pilgrims of old-Over the silver mountains Where spring the nectar fountains, There I will kiss The bowl of bliss, And drink mine everlasting fill On every milken hill, My soul has been adry before

That night the fair knights ravished our hearts with a feast of reason and flow of soul in verse and song. We were lifted on the strong wings of poetry and music into the upper empyrean. The singing knights with wanton heed and giddy cunning, their melting voice through mazes running, untwisted all the chains that tie the hidden soul of harmony

At Ulupalakua the mystic circle came near sudden and irreparable ruin. Two fair knights, who had passed unscathed through the dangers of Honomanu, Wailua-iki, and Alalele, nearly lost their lives by being compelled, much against their Brugler, L being compelled, much against their will, to ride double, a nondescript, composite quadruped with which they were not well acquainted. They Bailey, G Barton, Jno were warned to throw their lilywhite arms around the necks of the | Carson, Frank (2) double-headed monster, a kind of Chapman, WA(2) Cerberus. But owing to a strong and unconquerable repugnance in their maidenly breasts, they would not do so. It would have been better for them if they had been tightly bound, Mazeppa like, to their unsaddled and unbridled steed. They were not fairly seated when the horrid beast began to kick, plunge and buck. The dear knights closed their | Foster, W starry eyes and fondly embracing Gordan, Mrs Lizzle Greenfield, Dr each other were thrown violently backward to the ground. It was only a kind providence which saved them from breaking their necks; thus bringing the K. M. C. to a tragic end. They lay stunned and senseless for a minute; but can you imagine the joy of their fellow knights as they hastily and tenderly raised them from the ground, to see them open their sweet eyes again, and even smile forgiveness on those who had treated them so cruelly. The unfailing good nature under all provocations of the four fair knights of the incomprehensible zone was a chief source of the pleasure and suc-Lovell, Daniel cess of the expedition. The next day the inscrutible circumference was complete, their knighthood gained. With tears and moans; with wringing of hands and lingering kisses the knights of the circle round scattered to their
